This sequel to the Handbook on Qualitative Research Methods in Entrepreneurship has, for various reasons, been a long time in coming to fruition from the inception of the idea in 2010. Although that is not unusual for a volume of this kind, we would first like to thank all of our contributors for their patience with the process and for their continuing support. An extra special ‘thank you’ also needs to be paid to our section anchors without whom this book would not have been possible. The anchors, Claire M. Leitch, Sarah L. Jack, Sarah Drakopolou Dodd, John Watson and Rita G. Klapper, have worked assiduously at identifying researchers who could make interesting and worthwhile contributions, encouraged these individuals to become involved, organized the review process for each chapter in their section and kept the process in motion, which has been no easy task. The anchors have succeeded in engaging contributors from all over the world, both well-established and recognized scholars and relative newcomers to the field. In addition, they have also provided extra input by writing the introductions and postscripts for each section.

We have talked to numerous young scholars about the handbook and have consistently been confirmed in our conviction that there is indeed a need for it and that its publication is awaited with anticipation.

Finally, we would like to thank Francine O’Sullivan from Edward Elgar for her unwavering patience and continuous encouragement.
