Aims and scope

The relationship between human rights and the environment is fascinating, uneasy and increasingly urgent. This international journal provides a strategic academic forum for an extended interdisciplinary and multi-layered conversation that explores emergent possibilities, existing tensions, and multiple implications of entanglements between human and non-human forms of liveliness. We invite critical engagements on these themes, especially as refracted through human rights and environmental law, politics, policy-making and community level activisms.

‘The Journal of Human Rights and the Environment consistently highlights some of the best cutting-edge scholarship in this rapidly developing field.’

– John H. Knox, Henry C. Lauerman Professor of International Law, Wake Forest University School of Law, UN Special Rapporteur on Human Rights and the Environment, 2012 to 2018

‘No journal better engages with the impact on human rights to changes in our environment than the JHRE. Its articles invariably pull off that rare trick of being scholarly, readable and relevant.’

– Conor Gearty, Professor of Human Rights Law, London School of Economics, UK

Forthcoming issues as follows:
Capitalocene, Technification and the Future of Eco-Justice (10.2).
JHRE is a bi-annual journal covering the links and tensions between human rights and environmental issues, regulation and rights. The journal is widely recognised by international scholars for its intellectual quality, relevance and for the depth of its contribution to the vital search for new ways of negotiating the human-environment interface. The journal publishes a wide range of scholarly contributions - from top quality doctrinal scholarship to outstanding critical theoretical examinations of its themes.

The editors seek high quality contributions of between 8,000-12,000 words from academics, practitioners and activists working either field. The journal focuses on original research, articles, commentaries and book reviews and is aimed predominantly at academics and intellectuals working in the public sphere, engaged with the issues. The contributions are double blind peer reviewed prior to acceptance for publication.

Submissions should be sent to Julia Dehm (Managing Editor) at j.dehm@latrobe.edu.au. To propose a book review or for questions in relation to book reviews, please email: jhrebookreview@gmail.com.
